

Paul Fisher, M.D.

Dr. Paul Fisher, currently Distinguished Medical Educator at The Renaissance School of Medicine, is a retired Associate Professor of Radiology and Surgery, who graduated from Georgetown University School of Medicine, attended his radiology residency at Harvard Medical School, Mt. Auburn Hospital, then went on to do his Fellowship at Yale-New Haven Hospital and Yale Medical School.

Appointed at Stony Brook University Hospital in 1999, he specializes in Breast Imaging.

He is the former Acting Chairman of the Department of Radiology at Womens Hospital in Philadelphia, and was the Chief of Breast Imaging at Yale, Medical College of Pennsylvania, and Stony Brook. He had been a long standing member of the Board of Directors of Physicians for Social Responsibility, which won the Nobel Peace Prize in 1985. He has won the Teacher of the Year Award 7 times in the past 16 years, as well as the prestigious Aesclepius Teaching Award of Stony Brook Medical School (the only radiologist to have won this prize to date.) He has won many other awards, including the Broad Street Pump Award from the Physicians for Social Responsibility, The Michael Maffetone Outstanding Clinician Award, and the Ward Melville Heritage Partner Award. He is the former Chairman of the Alumni Schools Committee of Princeton University (his undergraduate alma mater), and thus was responsible for directing hundreds of interviews of Princeton University applicants.

Dr. Fisher recently completed a term on the RSNA Scientific Review Committee, and as a question writer for the American College of Radiology's CPI. He currently serves on the Board of Directors of the Suffolk County Medical Society. He is the ex-President of the Long Island Radiologic Society, and serves on its Board of Directors.
